Years of Suffering.

When suffering daily torture
From backache, rheumatic pain,
Any ill of kidneys or bladder,
Turn to Doan's Kidney Pills.
A cure endorsed by thousands.
Read an old man's tribute.

Sidney Justus, fruit dealer, of Mentor,
Ohio, says: "I was cured by Doan's Kidney Pills of a severe case of kidney trouble of eight or ten years' standing. I suffered the most severe backache and other pains in the region of the kidneys.
These were especially severe
when stooping
to lift any thing, and often I could hardly straighten my back. The aching was bad in the daytime, but just as bad at night, and I was always lame in the morning. I was bothered with rheumatic pains and dropsical swelling of the feet. The urinary passages were painful, and the secretions were discolored and so free that often I had to rise at night. I felt tired all day. Half a box served to relieve me, and three boxes effected a permanent cure."

A FREE TRIAL of this great kidney medicine which cured Mr. Justus will be mailed on application to any part of the United States. Address Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y. Sold by all dealers; price, fifty cents per box.

The Wise Hills Knew.

In the arms of the mountains
Fair Lake Kezar lay
Till the Moon-King threw backward
The dark Gates of Night,
And she woke all a-tremble
With joy and delight.
The great hills in pity
Looked down on their child,
All a-quiver in beauty
With love's passion wild.
Well they knew how the Moon-King
Other likes kissed,
And so they drew her
A silver veil-mist.

One World Ahead.

If this short life were all,
And naught beyond this fleeting breath,
No judgment just beyond our death,
No blissful haven after death,
Still I would strive a worthy life to lead,
And I would be the most blessed.
One world ahead of those who live in sin
And all got gain, and pleasures dearly bought,
Whose lives are all in vain.
With low ambitions, and with evil fraud;
And choosing right, I would not live in vain,
One world ahead of this dark world of pain.
But joy! there is a world beyond—
A haven with joys beyond compare,
Where we perennial ever dwell,
And all is glorious, bright and fair.
And doing good, dear will shall be led,
Within the fold, one world ahead.

The Paragraph Pulpit.

By EDWIN A. RUMBALL.

Is it necessary to believe in immortality in order to be good? As is well known the fear of death, of hell, and the hope of heaven have played a large part in the church's teaching about the good life. They are even now the only motives to religion. As a matter of fact, however, all conduct which is controlled by fear of punishment or hope of reward is immoral. Our sense of duty does not come from belief in doctrine, it is instinctive and its forms vary in different individuals and nations. Apropos of this, we may remember that George Elliot once said, in terrible earnestness,
"God is inconceivable, immortality is unbelievable, but Duty is preceptory and absolute."

The deep pathos of mortality has had a beneficial power at times in ruling our lives, we are told to hasten our kindness for the night cometh when no man can work and thus with greater earnestness we bend to toil and live for others. If there is one word which rings clearly and loudly to us all, it is, Be what you ought to be, the ruler that is God's affair.
This then is our conclusion this week that goodness does not depend upon immortality, that if there is no beyond, "it is better to be generous than selfish, better to be chaste than licentious, better to be true than false, better to be brave than a coward." The first purpose of religion is not to console, neither is it to give us immortality, but to guide us and aid towards the living of the good-will life here and now. Next week we shall tell that immortality is undemonstrable and not a matter for belief.

Sara Allard will move in where Mr.

We were aiming for the mouth of Bayou Sara on the Mississippi river and our average day's march was twenty miles. To follow it, however, was no "soft job." It was the last part of May, 1863, after marching nearly four hundred miles in all, that we came to the great river. The 12th Maine Regiment boarded a boat and steamed away, to land at midnight at a little village on the banks of Bayou Sara. Before we landed a story had gone the rounds of the regiment, being by all the true, that the rebels had prepared to meet us by placing two cannon in our front with which to mow us down as soon as we should land.

When we stepped on to the gang plank each soldier believed he was walking to his death. A person may face death without showing fear, but he cannot do it without straining his nerves to the highest pitch. However, we marched by the right flank up the street expecting every moment to be cut in pieces by grape-shot; but when we reached the central part of the village all was still, and it seemed that the rebel soldiers had quietly left. Our officers thought best to search the place and see if it was innocent as appearances indicated. The captain of our company and myself while walking along a piazza came across something that looked in the darkness like a bag of potatoes with a blanket thrown over it. The captain gave a kick, when it came up like a "Jumping Jack." It startled the captain so that for an instant he forgot his dignity and sung out "You son of a b—"

It proved to be a rebel soldier who failed to awake when his comrades left, and we took him prisoner of war. He was the only rebel soldier found in the village; yet to guard against a surprise our officers thought best to station a picket guard about the village. My post was in the road between a dwelling house on one side and what looked to be a grocery on the other. I decided to find out first thing in the morning what was kept there, hoping to find something good to eat.

The first person to appear in the morning was a negro, who looked surprised at sight of me, and his mouth began to stretch open; and as doubt changed to certainty it stretched more and more, until he was looking at a Yankee soldier finally stretched it from ear to ear. "What is this building used for?" I asked.

"That is a liquor store, sah," said he. That was all I cared to hear. Later in the morning the soldiers found out what was kept there and many a canteen was filled, though no one thought of paying a cent for rebel rum. There were some jelly on the shelves, but they were all gone, and the boys of the regiment were drunk or disorderly. The seller of "stagger juice" was sober surely.

We marched out a few miles from Bayou Sara in the direction of Portland and stopped for a day or two waiting for other troops to land. When all was ready for the advance, the 12th Maine took the lead, soon coming in contact with the rebel rear guard, when we deployed as skirmishers and fought our way up within sight of the rebel fortifications, arriving there about four o'clock p. m., when we halted at sound of the bugle. The rebel rear guard also halted and the firing was kept up with renewed activity. The soldiers standing next to me suddenly jumped into the air, then fell dead; a bullet had pierced his heart.

My picket line extended through a heavy growth of woodland, where I was to remain during the night on guard. There were eight or ten of us on the reserve, including the captain, and we had all been on duty for several days in succession, with but very little sleep. All of us were exhausted and very sleepy. At ten o'clock the captain ordered that one should remain awake while the rest laid down to sleep. I was chosen for the first watch of two hours as to their wakefulness I could take my turn at sleep, while others took their turns until morning.

I realized before one hour had passed that it would be almost an impossibility for me to keep awake the allotted time, for that terrible sleepy feeling was creeping over me and it seemed as if my eyelids were bound to close in spite of my struggles to keep them open. Walking, jumping and thrashing around had little effect, and not over the thought of the death penalty for sleeping on my post in face of the enemy could drive away "Old Morpheus." All that aroused me to do my best was the thought of the whole army in the rear, soundly sleeping and depending on the boys of the picket line to give the alarm in case of an attack. So I paced the ground, back and forth, jumped up and down, pounded my head with my fist hard enough to make me see stars but all to no purpose. After everything had been done that could be thought of that sleepy feeling still kept creeping, creeping over me.

I must have gone dead asleep while on my feet fighting like a hero to avoid it, then came the gray dawn of the morning when the captain awoke me, and I could remember only my battle with "Morpheus." That was not the end of my troubles, although the captain knew the condition I was in from loss of sleep, said nothing about it but I had fallen on my back across a log eight inches or so in diameter, with my head on the ground one side and feet on the other. It was long time before the sun shot in the small of my back was well again. I must have been a sound sleep for had I lain in that position ten minutes when awake couldn't have borne the agony of it.

The next move was the attack on the rebel stronghold. When we had advanced within 75 rods of the parapet we encountered a strip of fallen timber that reached up to the rebel fort. Our captain made a rush forward when he commanded to "Charge!" but found it impossible to march up over those fallen trees in face of the enemy's shot and shell. Every rebel soldier had three guns, each loaded with one bullet and the boys of the 12th Maine, shot and shell seemed to come as thick as hailstones.

Only 17 men in that whole army reached the breastworks in that charge, and "the little all" were men of the 12th Maine regiment. That little squad then found themselves unable to advance any farther—neither could they retreat, but stood there in the ditch waiting for orders. The officer in command sent a soldier back to General Kimball for orders; and that soldier to get there and back again had to run the gauntlet of a whole regiment of rebel guns, but his dangerous task was successfully accomplished without without some very "close calls."

fire, and from one of the rebel guns we heard a blank shot fired which was something of a puzzle to us. The next shot from our gun stopped the rebel fire from that quarter.

The next day a flag of truce was up two hours, which enabled both armies to bury their dead and care for the wounded. During the cessation of hostilities some of "us boys" went up to the parapet and held a friendly conversation with some of the rebel soldiers—the same as if they were our own comrades. We asked one of them about firing a blank shot and he said, "Well! there was one fired but we didn't fire it, your own artillery fired it, they are the best gunners in the world! We were loaded and had just runned in the powder, and inserted the lanyard when a ball from one of your guns skimmed over the top of ours and fired it off—killing the gunner instantly. The next shot from your gun entered the muzzle of ours and the ball being a little too large could not be removed. You have silenced several of our guns already." That was the end of it.

When the bugle sounded the call to arms we went back again to our stations and began to shoot the deadly missiles as common enemies. But the rebels had not done the honest thing—did not respect the flag of truce as our side did, but took advantage of it to set a gun in a new position where they could rake us.

There was considerable excitement for a few minutes and the shooting was lively until our gunners got the range, and soon that particular rebel gun was seen to topple over. A shout was raised by those who saw it done, and soon the whole army was shouting. Shouting from your gun entered the muzzle of ours and the ball being a little too large could not be removed. You have silenced several of our guns already." That was the end of it.

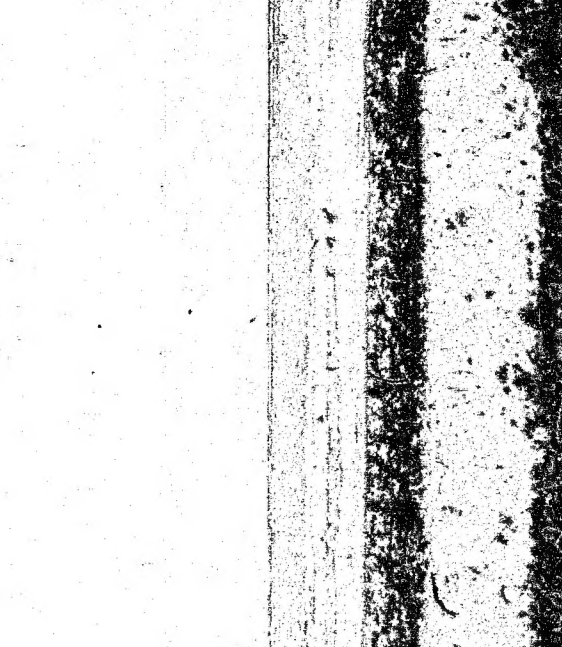

After dark the rebels opened on us with two big guns and kept up nearly all night; the burning fuse making of bright streak in the darkness. It would have been fun to watch them had we not known them to be sent on a mission of death.

A shot under full force in the air doesn't fly back much, but it caused the cold sweat to start when one was seen coming our way. It was an uncomfortable feeling to endure all night, and, I think, "scared me out of a year's growth."

Early in the morning we were sent to drive the enemy from our rear. After chasing them several miles without getting near enough to give them a shot we had for a few minutes rest. Near-by was a live-oak tree—the lowest limbs being not over seven feet from the ground, the shade of which I had chosen for a protection from the rays of the broiling sun. Looking up, I descried one of those monstrous southern snakes stretched out on a limb not more than a foot and a half above my head. I found a good stick and gave him a clip over the back that brought him to the ground but it took several more clips to finish him. A glance around showed me another snake of the same species making a bee line for the same tree and he met the same fate as the other. They were some seven feet long and very thick, of a brownish color, and looked as ugly as the muzzle of a rebel cannon.

Since May, 1906, Ayer's Sarsaparilla has been entirely free from alcohol. If you are in poor health, weak, pale, nervous, ask your doctor about taking this non-alcoholic tonic and alternative. If he has a better medicine, take his. Get the best always. This is our advice.

A sluggish liver means a coated tongue, a bad breath, and constipated bowels. The question is, "What is the best thing to do under such circumstances?" Ask your doctor if this is not a good answer: "Take laxative doses of Ayer's Pills."

A Kitchen Shower.

A kitchen shower surprise was given to Blanche Penley last Friday afternoon. Over 20 of her young lady friends met at Smith's store and marched up to the Penley home, carrying with them a variety of articles of kitchen use, also some useful presents for kitchen use.

Mrs. Penley, who was in the secret, had sent her daughter to one of her neighbors on errand, and when the party arrived, telephoned to her to come home. Blanche, supposing it to be some of her sisters who had come, did not suspect anything until she entered the parlor and saw the company all seated around with tin and agate ware of every description paraded in their hands. The room was tastefully decorated with flowers, golden glow, sweet peas and also potted plants, giving a homelike and pleasing effect.

Every number of the program was finely rendered and generously applauded and showed patient and pains-taking practice on the part of the pupils as well as the excellent instruction of the teacher. Mrs. Burnham was separately complimented on the thoroughness of her work with the class and especially upon the expression and repose with which even the very youngest, a child of nine years, performed their work.

Mrs. B. F. Bradbury of Norway sang two solos and graciously responded to hearty encores both times. Mrs. Bradbury is well known in Bethel and her many friends were glad of the opportunity of hearing her sing again.

NORWAY LAKE.

Norway Lake School Association Reunion
On Thursday Aug. 29, the Norway Lake school association held their first annual reunion at the school-house in grove by the side of Lake Penesseewasee.

The grove committee were early on the grounds making preparations for the feeding and general entertainment of the large assemblage always found at these enjoyable occasions.

Although the wind was high and the sun more or less obscured by dark clouds at 10 a. m. the people began to assemble and in a short time it was evident that the number of people present would exceed all previous records of the would exceed all previous records of the association. At 12 o'clock dinner was announced and about 200 persons sat down at the heavily laden tables which the dinner committee had been busy preparing all the morning.

There was an over abundance of all things good to eat, in fact when everyone was satisfied there was nearly enough left to have fed the same company again. As soon as the dinner was over and the tables cleared the entertainment committee announced that the weather was so good that they would hold the exercises in the grove as usual and all repaired to the school house where the meeting was called to order at 2:30 p. m.

After the offering of a brief prayer by Wm. P. French the reports of the secretary and treasurer were read and ap- proved and were followed by the reading of W. O. Holmes' poem, Bill and Joe, by Thaddeus Roberts, which was applicable to the occasion and brought forth hearty applause. Two pleasant hours were then spent in listening to anecdotes of by-gone school days as related by many of the older scholars and teachers in response to their names.

The secretary read several letters from absent ones who were unable to attend but kindly responded to the invitation with a few words of greeting.

These were followed by interesting remarks by J. A. Roberts, Dexter Howe, and Z. M. Mansur on "The Improvement of the Country." After this the usual business of the association was transacted and the following officers elected for the ensuing year:

Pres.—Asa Frost.
V. Pres.—Miss Madeline Roberts.
Sec.—Frances L. Partridge.
Treas.—James L. Partridge.

A motion to adjourn until one year from date was then carried and every one departed vowing it one of the most enjoyable occasions on the records of the association and expressing their determination to be present if possible a year hence.

BOLSTER'S MILLS.

This community received a shock, Thursday, Aug. 29th, when it was learned that Benjamin S. Skillings, who had gone to Oxford on business, had died suddenly while on his way home.

Mr. Skillings was 74 years old and some 40 years ago had rheumatic fever. Since that time he has had attacks of heart disease which of late years had become quite severe. Mr. Skillings remarked to a friend only a few weeks ago that his heart was troubling him and that he expected when the end came it would come suddenly. He had kept this from the family as much as possible, but numerous friends on hearing of his death called various remarks he had made to them.

Mr. Skillings, at about 11 o'clock a. m., was driving along the swamp road between the Webber schoolhouse and the Otisfield line, when he fell from his wagon into the water. Alton Perkins and another man were moving about a short distance away, and seeing the team without a driver, investigated the cause and found the body of Mr. Skillings described. Mr. Perkins at once summoned a physician but Mr. Skillings was beyond medical aid. In the opinion of the physician Mr. Skillings had a stroke of apoplexy and died almost instantly. He apparently made an effort to break his arms as his arms were doubled under the body.

He was the son of Merrill and Fannie Skillings and was born in Harrison, Aug. 26, 1833. His occupation was that of a farmer and dealer in cattle, sheep and hams. He also bought and shipped large quantities of fur. For many years he had been engaged in this business and his son, Sumner J., was also associated with him. Their extensive business has brought them in contact with people throughout the entire county and adjoining territory, and both father and son were well known as men of integrity.

Mr. Skillings had served his town as selectman for a period of 12 years, also as deputy sheriff for some time. He was a member of Crooked River lodge of Masons and Harrison lodge of Odd Fellows. Politically he was always a republican.

Nearly 10 years ago he married Mary Scribner who survives him. She is now 77 years old. Their three children are Sumner J. Skillings of Bolster's Mills, Mrs. Fannie E. Tyler of Mason and Mrs. Carrie Weston of Bolster's Mills. There are also two brothers and one sister: Isaac S. and Ambrose Skillings of Otisfield.

The funeral was held Saturday from his late home at Bolster's Mills, attended by Rev. Frederick Newport of Oxford. There were a large number of friends present and the floral offerings were many and beautiful. Among the ones who were present were the Messrs. B. Pike, J. A. Gay, Bolster's Mills; B. Rounds and Mrs. Jewett, Otisfield; Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Weston and many others. The community has lost a good and kind-hearted and helpful citizen, relatives but by a big circle of friends and acquaintances.
